Parshas Ki Seitze 5758

"If you see your brother's ox or sheep going astray, you must not ignore them. You must return them to your brother. If your brother is not near to you, or if you do not know who [the owner is], you must bring [the animal] home and keep it until your brother identifies it, whereupon you must return it to him. You must do the same to a donkey, an article of clothing, or anything else that your brother loses and you find. You must not ignore it." (Devarim 22:1-3)
